Sabina helps clients navigate environmental regulatory compliance, enforcement, and litigation, with an emphasis on waste management, emissions, and sustainability.

Before joining Beveridge & Diamond, Sabina held various legal internships with the California Department of Justice's Land Use and Conservation Section, the Southern Environmental Law Center, and the Office of Enforcement and Compliance Assurance (OECA) at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. In these roles, she gained litigation experience working on matters involving Clean Air Act enforcement, hazardous air pollutants, oil pipelines, land use, and environmental regulatory proceedings. She also supported the preparation of litigation referrals to the U.S. Department of Justice.

As a student attorney in Stanford Law School's Environmental Law Clinic, Sabina helped prepare and file a summary judgment motion in federal litigation involving proposed development in the Mojave Desert.

Before law school, Sabina managed energy conservation and sustainability initiatives at Stanford University.
